Oh. May we not hope for such a position, or rather be assured of it, from the eternal revolutions of unguided matter, and may not this account for all the appearing wisdom and contrivance, which is in the universe?

I want to impress you how real my fear of God. Have you ever seen Nature in any way? When he approaches, he sees that it is actually nine gates—three each of brass, iron, and adamant— and that two strange shapes stand guard in. Indeed, this seems to be such a transitory glimpse that one cannot even imagine it; yet from the bottom of a well a star is seen for quite a long time. A yellow legal pad in the middle of the night might be the best therapy, after all. In this book, happily, our dialogue continues, taking us to new places, and powerfully reiterating some of what has been told to me earlier.
