As Chandrasekaran hints, the underlying problem was the original decision that provinces of Afghanistan should each be farmed out to separate NATO allies. I picked it back up in August, starting from the very beginning, and completed it in early September. As we stare down the barrels of Egypt's American-purchased tanks and Assad's thicket of anti-air cannons, we'd do well to remember the limitations of even a superpower to remake a corner of the world for the better.
