At the same time, international tourism was also on the increase. Consequently, any one tourism environment may be perceived and consumed in different ways through differing modes of behaviour on the part of the tourist and, hence, the impacts of tourism development may vary according to the behaviour of different tourist groups see Figure 1. That is, it occurs on a global scale.

Your best bet to succeed in making a real difference is thus to get your hands dirty as a tourism practitioner. It should only mean that the binary, the mechanistic, the reductionist, the inhumane and the ultimately self-destructive approach to change is. That is, in addition to assuming incorrectly the increasingly widespread adoption of responsible tourism consumption, the dynamics of global tourism demand are overlooked.
