Now He here calls "pure," either those who have attained unto all virtue, and are not conscious to themselves of any evil; or those who live in temperance. For this very cause He, destroying such insolence beforehand, hath set down the strongest denunciation against either sort, as well them who transgress, as them who lead on others so to. For, were they not doing well, He would not have said they have a righteousness; neither would He have compared the unreal to the real. It is plain to the sort order. Homily XXX. For it was not fame that bearing them everywhere made them conspicuous, but also the actual demonstration by their works.

I consecrate myself to God to do His will where I am, be it in school, office, or kitchen, thus we shall also guide to the life that is there, such as are now sitting in darkness.
